

COLLEGE OF COMPUTING & INFORMATICS

Drexel University is one of a few U.S. institutions with a college that encompasses both the depth and breadth of computing and informatics — and the important interplay between those fields. With an innovative interdisciplinary academic format, the College of Computing & Informatics (CCI) is uniquely poised to meet the evolving needs of society as well as underpin the rapidly growing, pervasive, and transformational roles of information and technology in today's economy.

Meeting at the intersection of computing and information science, the diverse interdisciplinary online and on-campus graduate and doctoral programs are preparing the next generation of information and technology innovators and solution makers. All CCI programs are accredited by the Middle States Commission on Higher Education.

CCI offers numerous master's degrees, two doctoral degrees, and a variety of post-bachelor's certificate programs, both on campus and online. Students graduate from CCI with a solid foundation in computing and/or information science with advanced knowledge and specialization in fields ranging from artificial intelligence and machine learning to computer science and human-computer interaction. CCI graduates are highly sought after by business and industry. The next generation of leadership begins here.
