

GRADUATE STUDIES

Let's Begin a Conversation

FIND YOUR NEXT STEP

As a global R1 research institution ranked among the top 50 private U.S. universities by U.S. News & World Report, Drexel provides a comprehensive interdisciplinary education. Since 1891, our academic model has integrated knowledge and experience with what students already know, uniquely preparing them to succeed in the real world. And our graduate programs take this concept even further.

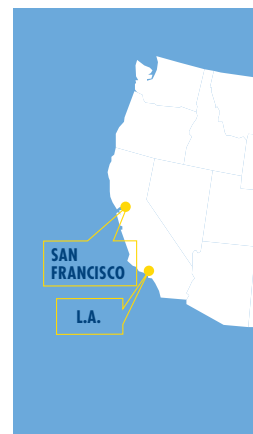

Through advanced research opportunities and practical hands-on experience, our expert faculty members guide students to develop specialized academic paths that leverage their individual accomplishments and speak directly to their needs and personal goals — readying every graduate student for their next step.

We know that your valuable experience will serve to enrich our University as you learn to make a greater impact in your chosen field. So, let's begin a conversation.

Unlimited Academic Opportunities

Drexel's unique approach to academics, with a focus on application through research and practical experience, allows students to develop expertise and provides opportunities to apply this advanced knowledge in real-world situations. The University supports students with an innovative curriculum and comprehensive resources, state-of-the-art facilities, and interdisciplinary research opportunities for students to tackle society's challenges and find solutions.

Research at Drexel is driven by the University's faculty and students from all disciplines and at every level of experience. Most graduate programs even offer extensive, collaborative research options. Graduate students at Drexel work closely with their professors, mentors, and fellow students to test established methodologies and explore new ideas, then have the chance to match concept to practice in laboratories, neighborhood classrooms, nursing centers, and more.

Taking advantage of our vast professional network of brands, employers, and Dragon alumni, students can develop relationships and make meaningful connections with leaders across various industries. Plus, some of our graduate programs offer the opportunity to participate in our cooperative education program, known as Drexel Co-op (also available for international students in select master's degree programs). Drexel Co-op enables students to test-drive careers through up to six months of résumé-enhancing work experience before they graduate.

No matter the path, graduate students at Drexel use new and innovative approaches as they collaborate with experts in their fields through research endeavors, special projects, and more. Drexel is a community of students, faculty, and professional staff from around the world who will challenge you and help you advance.

Our Graduate Community

As an anchor institution in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania — the sixth largest city in the U.S. — Drexel is located in an international hub that gives our students the advantage of pursuing an education in a city that offers them numerous cultural, historical, and social opportunities. The city serves as an extension of our campus, where students can build strong connections with respected businesses, nonprofits, research facilities, and agencies throughout our community.

Located in the heart of the northeastern United States, Philadelphia offers close proximity and strong ties to New York City and Washington, D.C., enabling students to easily explore different American cities and expand their professional networks.

At Drexel, we are committed to ensuring that our graduate students have the resources, guidance, and support they need to find success. From the moment an international student decides to attend Drexel, the office of International Students and Scholars Services (ISSS) helps guide them through the visa process and anything they need along the way to graduation.

In addition, our Graduate College works closely with University leaders to advocate on behalf of students and foster our graduate community here. As a central part of graduate campus life at Drexel, the College offers professional development services, cultural and social programming, conferences, receptions, and more — providing opportunities for students to discover new ways to collaborate with their fellow colleagues both inside and outside of their field of study.

25+ Active Graduate Student Organizations

Included in our more than 25 active graduate student organizations is the International Graduate Student Association (IGSA), which addresses the needs of Drexel's graduate international population in addition to planning events and assisting with academic services. Our graduate students come from diverse backgrounds and places around the world, and each contributes a unique piece to our welcoming and inclusive community.

ADMISSIONS

Individual graduate programs have specific deadlines and requirements. Make sure to submit all required materials before your application deadline. Applicants may only apply to one program.

Program Requirements

Every college and program takes into consideration a number of criteria when determining admission, including prior college or university performance, letters of recommendation, standardized test scores, essays, and related experience.

Some programs require that you submit Graduate Record Examinations (GRE) exam scores in order for your application to be considered. Even for programs that don't require you take the GRE, many programs still encourage you to take the test and send your scores to Drexel.

Many programs also require a demonstration of English proficiency.

Financial Aid Resources

Financial aid is available to most graduate students primarily through student loans, assistantships, merit-based scholarships, tuition remission, and incentive programs. Internships, traineeships, and special fellowships are also available in select programs.

In addition, Drexel scholarships and grants are available for most master's-level students. In particular, the Drexel Lifelong Learner Award, which offers a 30 percent tuition savings, is open to any Drexel alumni, who has or will earn a bachelor's or master's degree, for participating graduate-level programs.
